MEMORANDUM FOR MR. GRAY

I attach herewith Dr. Debevoise's memo with the result of his research concerning the references to Senator Goldwater made by Martin and Mitchell at their Moscow press conference.

Do you wish us to pursue the matter further?

In any event the difficulties which we have had in running these references down would appear to be an indication of the thoroughness with which the Soviets follow American activities!

SUBJECT: Quotation from Senator Goldwater by US Defectors

Mitchell and Martin went on leave on June 24. The text of the statement left in the Laurel bank (as released by Moscow) was dated June 22. In this document there is no mention of Senator Goldwater nor any quotation from his pre-convention speech.

On September 6, Mitchell and Martin held a press conference in Moscow. The text of the statement they released then (as given by the FBIS and the New York Times on September 7, page 10) has the following paragraph:

"Senator Barry Goldwater, Chairman of the Republican Senatorial Campaign Committee, made a speech in Chicago on the eve of the Republican National Convention in which he said, 'We must not agree to a further ban on nuclear testing, nor disarmament in the near future.' In this same speech he also said: 'To our undying national shame, there are among us those who would prefer to crawl on their bellies to Moscow rather than to face the possibility of an atomic war.'"

Senator Goldwater's statement was made before the Republican Platform Committee at the Sheraton-Blackstone Hotel in Chicago on July 19. Extracts of this speech appeared in the Chicago Daily Tribune, July 20, page 2 (photo copy attached). The complete text as released to the press on 19 July is also attached. Both of these accounts contain the "crawl on their bellies" passage, but neither mentions the Senator's remark on nuclear testing and disarmament. I have been unable to find the source of the latter statement, though Mitchell and Martin claim it was in the same speech.

Probably the Tribune drew its account from the official press release. Senator Goldwater's office told the librarian at USIA that the talk was made from notes. Presumably the text was prepared from stenotype and may have been edited.

In any case, I do not know if the Senator made the statement on testing and disarmament, or if he did, how Mitchell and Martin obtained it.

Do you wish me to pursue this further?

form writing efforts, as follows:

"The chief concern of the Democrats was to pick a ticket acceptable to its dissident factions. The main Democratic objective, it was made clear in Los Angeles, is to regain national power at any cost.

"Our task is vastly different. Our concern is with enunciating a philosophy of government which we believe is best for our country, our people and their future—even at the risk of losing an election."

Sen. Goldwater did not mince words in his presentation, telling the plank drafters that "the American people have become cynically suspicious of platforms and I am suggesting that the Republican party, in this year of national peril, would do well to discard discredited patterns of the past."

'Freedom or Slavery?'

"I am suggesting," he continued, "the issue which we must decide is one of freedom or slavery. The world stands divided on this issue today. Unfortunately, the challenge is not presented in such clearly defined and recognizable terms.

"To our undying national shame there are those among us who would prefer to crawl on their bellies to Moscow rather than face the possibility of an atomic war.

"Our enemies are capitalizing on our inability or unwillingness to recognize the true implications of the cold war. Russia is determined to destroy our ideals and our ideas. And the tragedy of freedom is that so far they have been frighteningly successful."

In foreign affairs, this country has moved with timidity and indecision. Goldwater charged, even tolerating [Premier] Castro's name-calling and confiscation of American property in Cuba, altho "the blood of American soldiers bought freedom for Cuba in the first place."

Must Maintain Power

Goldwater said that the Republican party must determinedly maintain the most powerful military power in the world and must be willing to use this power—"and our economic power—to defend the rights of American citizens and to preserve American property.

"I am reminding the Republican platform committee that the individual liberties are at stake."

cific figure on the "growth-manship" issue.

Rockefeller's statement repeated earlier assertions that an additional 3½ billion dollars a year should be spent on national defense. He contends that the Eisenhower administration budgeting has been inadequate.

The statement omitted any mention of the controversy over medical aid to the aged. Rockefeller and the Democratic national platform think it should be financed thru social security. Nixon favors a federal-state subsidy program.

Hope to Please Both

No new areas of difference were spelled out, which encouraged the top platform drafters to hope that the document they draft would be satisfactory to both Nixon and Rockefeller.

Rockefeller said that he "deeply" believes that "the Republican party is best equipped by tradition and belief and ability" to give leadership at a time when Americans "feel a great uneasiness and concern about the future."

For the free world, Rockefeller proposed a "grand design" of regional confederations of nations, such as the North Atlantic community, to "make truly practical and possible fast progress in freer trade, joint economic and social progress and in common defense" against the threat of communism.

"America cannot indefinitely support and sustain the individual economies of a growing number of individual states which, in view of the present lack of an international political order uniting free nations, have virtually no chance or hope of eventually solving their own problems or meeting their own ends," Rockefeller said.

To a questioner, he said he favored a common market for an association of states, but did not go into detail.

Rockefeller was not in the

MEANY SILENT ON LABOR FOR PRES

Insists Choice
Not Been Made

By GEORGE H. MEANY, president, insisted that organized labor decided whom to support.

Meany will determine which political candidate he will support only after it is clear that the choice is between two men. He said on the eve of his appearance before the Republican platform committee that he was ignoring the fact that most of the major AFL-CIO executive would support the ticket of Ken Kesel. Meany said "labor has no political party."

Explains Labor's

In a speech before the International Brotherhood of Bookbinders in the Conrad Hill Hotel, Meany said labor will wait and interest in the election first and then will use their power to elect the candidate of the labor movement.

MEMO FOR Sen Cabell - personal

The attached was with some papers on the Martin + Mitchell case which I'm trying to clean up. Apparently Allen Dulles gave it to Scty Douglas.

Since M + M are the two most discredited guys in America, I don't see any use in playing the Soviet game by discussing this in the OCB. So - recommend that this be dropped in a file marked "dead" and that we forget it.

Remarks:  I have seen this [ ] I believe that what happened - as [ ] suggests - is that the DCI passed it to Douglas at an OCB luncheon.  As you will see, the point seemed to be that since Martin and Mitchell took off in June how could they have gotten the information about Goldwater's speech in July? I think that later research showed that Goldwater had made the same statements much earlier and that they were in the Congressional Record and therefore available to the wayward boys.  (over)
